History of Old Exchange.

(Excerpts from article by Thos. Gamble, Jr.)

THE OLD CITY EXCHANGE was built by a Stock Company in 1799 at a cost of $20,000. On June 5th of that year the Cornerstone was laid on the site of the Old Exchange which was destroyed by fire in 1796.

The "long room" has been utilized on many occasions for public meetings, for the reception of distinguished visitors and as a suitable place when the honored dead might lie in state.

Aaron Burr, Presidents Monroe, Polk and Fillmore, Gen. Lafayette, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and other great men of the early history of the Republic there met and received the homage of the Savannahians of the ante-bellum period. No building in the State of Georgia had more historic memories clustered about it than had this venerable edifice. In the infancy of the city, the belles and beaux of the little city danced therein, and at several times rooms were granted temporarily for school purposes to worthy pedagogues of limited means. For many years it was the center of the social life of the community. Itinerant actors and passing showmen with strange animals to exhibit, found it a convenient place for the purpose, and the City Council leniently consented to its use for such popular amusements. The Savannah Volunteer Guards, the Republican Blues, the Georgia Hussars, Irish Jasper Greens, Oglethorpe Light Infantry and "Phoenix Rifles" occupied quarters in the building prior to the occupancy of their own quarters. For a long while the Custom House and Post Office were within its walls.

In his annual report in 1903 Mayor Myers urged the construction of a new city hall. On February 18, 1903, the special committee of Council, appointed to consider the advisability of erecting a new city hall, reported that new quarters were badly needed and recommended that a new city hall be built on the site of the old Exchange. The report was adopted. The names of the special committee are: The Mayor, Aldermen Thomas, Davant, Dixon and Watson.

The new structure, when completed and furnished, will cost about $250,000.
